ECONOMICS & POLITICS

	GCSE text	AS level text	A2 level text
Title	N/A	As the history of the last couple of years suggests, the economic and political world is ever changing, and the changes can be quite large. Hence, new and updated economics and politics text books are written nearly every year. Although we may use the same textbooks next year, there is a strong chance we will not. This is why there are no specific texts in this section.

ENGLISH

English is increasingly a skills-assessing, rather than a text-assessing, subject: consequently, the selection of texts for a teacher to choose from at GSCE is wide, and based upon a combination of pupil interest and teacher expertise. At A level, this is even more the case: coursework at A2, for example, could see a group of 12 pupils studying in total around 30 different texts, as teachers offer bespoke coursework structures (based on a three text study) to individual pupils. This, in my opinion, is part of what makes English such a great subject; however, it does make it tricky for us to offer advanced notice of standard texts, as there are so few - Shakespeare coursework, for example, offers over twenty realistic text options. Nonetheless, we will certainly strive to keep parents and pupils in the loop with reading lists and selections at the earliest convenience.
